BIOGRAPHY OF EDWARD VII IS NOW "YOUR MAJESTY"

SOME FACTS OF THE KING'S LIFE.

Is a Polish, Traveled, Tactful English Gentleman—His Life Has Been a Busy One—The Queen.

Edward VII was born on November 4, 1841, at Buckingham Palace, in London.

At the moment of his birth, as eldest son of the sovereign, he became Duke of Cornwall. Within four weeks he was created Prince of Wales and Earl of Chester by royal patent.

Among the Prince's other titles are Duke of Rothesay, Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Prince of Saxony, Earl of Chester, Earl of Warwick, Earl of Dublin, Baron Renfrew and Lord of the Isles.

In infancy the Prince was secluded as much as possible from the public in order not to excite his vanity. Before he was 18 months old, however, he had sat for his portrait several times.

He owed his first training to Lady Lytton, Mrs. Gladstone's sister, who was his governess until he was 6 years old. Then the question of educating the future king became a very serious one.

Numerous Bishops were consulted, and they all said that it should be truly English and truly moral, which things they regarded as equivalent. Finally Henry Birch, who had been captain of Eton, was chosen as tutor.

In the same year, 1848, the Prince paid his first visit to Ireland, and the welcome he then received laid the foundation for his hearty liking of the Irish character.

He made his first official visit to London on October 30, 1849, at the opening of the Coal Exchange. The Queen was to have attended, but being too ill to do so, she delegated the duty to the princess Royal and the Prince.

After a period at Oxford and then at Cambridge, he made a tour of Canada and visited the United States. The broadening education of travel has since been his in the fullest sense, so that he has been protected from insularity and enabled to view his own country in its relation to other countries, people and conditions.

In 1863 he married the Princess Alexandra of Denmark, whose beauty of person and personality at once won the heart of her adopted land. Coming as she did of a race regarded by Englishmen as their close kin and natural friends, the beautiful Danish girl found a warm welcome awaiting her in England.

The marriage was an extremely popular one. The Princess of Wales brought with her from the unpretentious Danish court just those qualities which were calculated to commend her to the English people; and from that day to this, as a princess, as a mother, as a leader of society, as a lover of good works, she has been followed by the unswerving love and loyalty of the nation.

Marlborough House became their town house, with Sandringham as a country place.

An heir to the throne was born on January 8, 1864, and was named Albert Victor Christian Edward, after the Prince Consort the Queen, the King of Denmark and the Prince of Wales. In June of the following year Prince George was born. Three daughters were subsequently born: Louise in 1867; Victoria in 1868; and Maud in 1869.

In 1871 the Prince was attacked by fever and for a time was not expected to live. In 1875-76 the Prince visited India and was entertained in gorgeous Oriental style by the native Princes.

The Prince is a thoroughly representative Englishman, to whose endowment has been fortunately added the extremely useful quality of tact. This gift is doubtless a beneficent inheritance from his father. It has gone a long way toward making him one of the most popular men in the empire.

From his childhood kindness has been one of the Prince's distinguished characteristics.

During the last quarter of a century the growing age of the Queen and her disinclination to take part in public functions has led to the Prince of Wales discharging many of the public duties of the sovereign as his father did before him. He has been the social heart of the nation, and has been simply indispensable in such labors as opening bridges, parks, hospitals, presiding at meetings, dinners, etc., and taking a lively interest in social, imperial and charitable matters. His royal highness is the beau ideal of a man of the world not a character to excite enthusiasm, but a character serviceable to a Prince. With tact and good judgment he knows by instinct the right thing to do, and to these qualities he adds the invaluable gift of an unflinching memory for names and faces. He wears his dignity easily though he never casts it off. When who have been tempted to treat him with undue familiarity have found they mistook his affability. He always expects the deference due to his rank.

The Parliamentary experience of the Prince extends over three and thirty years. In 1865 he first took his seat in the House of Lords as Duke of Cornwall. When he attends the House of Lords he sits on the cross-benches, as do all the royal dukes. Naturally he takes no part in the deliberations of the house.

The income of the Prince was settled in the year of his marriage. On the proposal of Lord Palmerston it was decided to grant him his highness £40,000 a year and £10,000 for the use of the Princess, the Duchy of Cornwall being expected to provide in addition an annual sum of £30,000. The estimate has been exceeded, with the exception of two or three years, for the last quarter of a century. The Prince also receives £15,000 as Colonel of a regiment, the income of himself and the Princess being thus over £110,000, and his town house is kept up by the country.

Sandringham is the personal property of the Prince, purchased at a cost of £230,000 from the revenues of the Duchy of Cornwall, which had accumulated during his minority.

Prince Albert Victor, Duke of Clarence, the Prince's eldest son, died in 1892. The second son, Prince George, Duke of York, who then became heir to the throne, married in 1893 the Princess May of Teck, and has now three children: Edward Albert, born June 23, 1894; Albert Frederick Arthur George, born 1895, and an infant daughter, Louise, the Prince of Wales' eldest daughter, was married in 1899 to the Duke of Fife, and is the mother of three daughters. Princess Victoria, is still unmarried; and Princess Maud was married in 1896 to her cousin, Prince Carl of Denmark.

The report of the land office for the past year is now being rushed to completion and will be delivered to the governor next week. The disordered state of land matters during 1900 has caused the delay.

GREETING FROM THE OFFICERS OF STATE.

The Banquet Following the Accession, Strange and Mournful Ceremony, Traditional Announcement.

NEW YORK, January 22.—A special cable from Coves says:

"Your Majesty," said Balfour, First Lord of the Treasury, in reverent tones, saluting King Edward VII, as the new sovereign sadly emerged from the chamber of death at Osborne House. Balfour was the first of the great officers of state to salute Albert Edward by his new title. He, with Earl Pembroke, lord steward, and Clarence, lord chamberlain, had been assembled in a room adjoining that in which Queen Victoria breathed her last. In early times the first subject to greet the new sovereign was rewarded with a large grant of land, but this custom long ago died out. "Your Majesty," said Earl Clarence, following the First Lord of the Treasury, "Your Majesty," said Earl Pembroke, following Earl Clarence.

The Prince of Wales became King of England at exactly 6:30 o'clock tonight, when Sir James Reid, one of her majesty's physicians, standing in watchful grief at the bedside in Osborne House, pronounced life extinct.

The King was much affected when the end came. His majesty was the last to leave the chamber of death. Subsequently there was a banquet, a state function required by etiquette, notwithstanding the sadness of the occasion. Utterly worn out by watching at the Queen's bedside, the new Queen and Princess Beatrice and Princess Christian were not able to be present at the banquet. The King sat at the head of the table, "above the salt," by virtue of an old feudal custom. The Emperor of Germany, his royal nephew, sat on his right. In the Middle Ages the King, Queen and nobles, and likewise their servants and attendants, all sat at the same table, in the center of which was a great dish of salt. The host and nobles were gathered around one end of the table, and below the salt at the other end were the subjects.

HEAVY MEAT SHIPMENTS.

Sonoma Brings a Large Cold Storage Cargo.

The Sonoma brought the largest shipment of cold storage goods that ever came to Honolulu or left San Francisco, according to the Metropolitan Meat Company. It was slow work discharging such freight and the vessel therefore was not nearly ready to leave at midnight, the hour first set. Work was continued all night, but the steamer did not leave till this afternoon. The night of work on the heavy wharf was hard one. Very heavy rains fell and the clerks and custom house men and laborers had an unpleasant time.

The Sonoma had 130 tons of cold storage stuff. There were 430 beef carcasses. The rest was meat, fish and game of various kinds.

THE BRIGHT SIDE OF LIFE.

It is a feeling common to the majority of us that we do not get quite the amount of happiness we are entitled to in this world. Among the countless things which tend to make us more or less miserable in health, takes first place. Hannah More said that sin was generally to be attributed to biliousness. No doubt a crippled liver with the resulting impure blood, is the cause of more mental gloom than any other single thing. A chronic dyspeptic, says an eminent English physician, is always on the verge of a mental upset. And when he reckons up the fearful aggregate of pain and fever persons thus afflicted have suffered. You can see these people everywhere. For them life is scarcely to be said to have any "bright side" at all. Hence the eagerness with which they search for relief and cure. Remedies like WAMPOLE'S PREPARATION have not attained their high position as the confidence of the people by vain assertions and boasting advertisements. They are obliged to win it by doing actually what is claimed for them. That this remedy deserves its reputation is conceded. It is palatable as honey and contains the nutritive and curative properties of Pure Cod Liver Oil, extracted by us from fresh cod livers, combined with the Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites, Extracts of Malt and Wild Cherry. Nothing has such a record of success in Fevers, Rheumatism, Scrofula, Lung Troubles, all emaciating complaints and disorders, that tend to undermine the foundations of strength and vigor. Its use helps to show life's brighter side. Genuine only is effective from the first dose. "You cannot be disappointed in it." Sold by chemists everywhere.

D. K. Gibson, A. S. Tubbs, T. R. Pheby, George Fritsch and Claus Spreckels, Esq. H. Sheldon was elected secretary. The company has paid $150,000 in dividends during the year, at the rate of 50 cents a month on 25,000 shares.
